An automatic snowflake ice machine is a type of ice maker that produces soft, fluffy ice crystals that resemble snowflakes. These machines use a process called 'shaving' to create the ice, where a rotating blade shaves thin layers off of a block of ice until it forms into small, light flakes. The flakes are then collected and dispensed through a chute or auger system, ready to be used in drinks, desserts, or other applications. Snowflake ice machines are often used in commercial settings such as restaurants, cafes, and bars, but can also be found in some home kitchens for personal use.
