Abstracts

The global Baked Cat Food market size is expected to reach $ 1390 million by 2032, rising at a market growth of 8.2% CAGR during the forecast period (2026-2032). In 2025, global production of baked cat food reached approximately 158,400 metric tons, with an average selling price of about USD 4,850 per ton. Baked cat food is a type of feline staple food produced using a baking process at relatively lower temperatures compared with conventional high-temperature extrusion. Through longer-duration, lower-temperature heat treatment, ingredients are gradually cooked and dehydrated, helping preserve animal proteins, fatty acids, and natural flavors while forming a denser kibble structure closer to natural food textures. Compared with traditional extruded cat food, baked cat food typically offers advantages in palatability, ingredient integrity, and digestibility, and is primarily positioned in the mid-to-high-end cat food market. Currently, the baked cat food market remains in a niche development and penetration stage. While its overall scale is significantly smaller than that of traditional extruded cat food, acceptance among premium and functional cat food consumers continues to increase. Demand is primarily driven by cat owners who place strong emphasis on digestive health, urinary health, and ingredient quality, with key markets in North America, Europe, and selected high-end regions in Asia. In terms of trends, products are evolving toward higher animal protein inclusion, low-carbohydrate or grain-free formulations, single-protein recipes, and functional nutrition claims (such as gut health and hairball control), while brands increasingly emphasize ingredient traceability, process transparency, and nutritional science validation. Market perspectives suggest that although baked cat food carries higher costs and price points than mainstream extruded products, its gentle processing and health-oriented positioning support continued expansion within the premium cat food segment. This report studies the global Baked Cat Food production, demand, key manufacturers, and key regions.
