Abstracts

The global Bed Bug Removal Service market size is expected to reach $ 3109 million by 2032, rising at a market growth of 4.5% CAGR during the forecast period (2026-2032).

Bed bug removal service refers to a professional environmental remediation service provided by specialized pest control companies. This service utilizes a comprehensive approach combining physical, chemical, and thermal treatments to detect, locate, eliminate, and maintain long-term control of bed bugs in buildings, furniture, hotel rooms, residences, and public spaces. The service typically employs methods such as steam treatment, high-temperature baking, low-temperature freezing, chemical spraying, microencapsulation of residual insecticides, and Integrated Pest Management (IPM) systems to achieve full life-cycle control of bed bug eggs, nymphs, and adults. It represents a high-frequency, high-value segment of urban pest control and is widely used in high-density population environments such as residences, hotels, hospitals, transportation vehicles, and student dormitories.

With accelerating global urbanization, increased international travel, and the expansion of accommodation-intensive industries, bed bug problems are showing a continuous resurgence. Simultaneously, bed bugs are developing increasing resistance to traditional insecticides, prompting the industry to gradually upgrade towards a 'thermal treatment + intelligent monitoring + integrated pest management (IPM)' approach. The future growth of the bed bug control service market will be driven primarily by three factors: first, the high-frequency pest control demand brought about by the recovery of the tourism and hospitality industries; second, increased public health awareness driving proactive pest control at the household level; and third, the rapid replacement of traditional chemical spraying methods with intelligent detection and environmentally friendly, non-toxic pest control technologies. Therefore, the industry is shifting from 'passive pest control services' to 'prevention + monitoring + long-term management services,' exhibiting an overall trend of technological upgrading and high added value.
