Abstracts

According to our (Global Info Research) latest study, the global Bentonite Liner market size was valued at USD million in 2022 and is forecast to a readjusted size of USD million by 2029 with a CAGR of % during review period. The influence of COVID-19 and the Russia-Ukraine War were considered while estimating market sizes.

Bentonite liner is a type of geosynthetic clay liner (GCL) that is commonly used in the construction of landfills, ponds, and other containment systems. It is made up of two layers of geotextile fabric that sandwich a layer of bentonite clay.

Bentonite is a highly absorbent clay that swells when it comes into contact with water. This property makes it an excellent material for use in containment systems because it can create an impermeable barrier that prevents water and other liquids from seeping through.

To create a bentonite liner, the bentonite clay is first mixed with water to form a slurry. This slurry is then spread onto one of the geotextile layers, which is then folded over to cover the clay layer. The second geotextile layer is then placed on top of the first layer, creating a sandwich with the bentonite clay in the middle. The layers are then stitched together to create a strong, durable liner.

Bentonite liners are often used in combination with other liner materials, such as high-density polyethylene (HDPE), to create a multi-layered system that provides even greater protection against leaks and contamination.
