Bonded anchors, also known as chemical anchors, are anchors used to fix components to substrates (such as concrete, brick walls, etc.). They consist of a metal rod (usually stainless steel or high-strength alloy steel) and a special chemical adhesive. During installation, the metal rod is first inserted into the pre-drilled hole, and then the chemical adhesive is injected. After the adhesive cures, the metal rod is firmly bonded to the substrate to play an anchoring role.
