Abstracts

The global Breeding Industry Insurance market size is expected to reach $ 5359 million by 2032, rising at a market growth of 5.5% CAGR during the forecast period (2026-2032).

Breeding industry insurance refers to a risk protection product offered by insurance companies to livestock and poultry farmers, covering economic losses caused by diseases, natural disasters, disease outbreaks, accidents, policy-driven culling, and market fluctuations. Its core functions include stabilizing livestock income, ensuring food supply chain security, and mitigating the impact of major diseases on the agricultural system through risk diversification and fiscal subsidies.

The long-term outlook for breeding industry insurance is generally positive, primarily driven by the continued growth in global demand for animal protein, the increasing proportion of large-scale farming, and the frequent occurrence of disease risks. As the livestock industry transitions from scattered farmers to intensive and industrialized farming, the value of individual assets increases, making insurance demand more rigid. Simultaneously, governments worldwide are generally promoting the expansion of policy-based agricultural insurance through premium subsidies and reinsurance mechanisms to ensure food security and stabilize the meat supply chain. At the technological level, technologies such as the Internet of Things (IoT), animal health monitoring, and AI-based disease prediction are improving risk pricing capabilities and claims efficiency, driving the product's upgrade from 'post-event compensation' to 'risk management services.' In the future, the industry will develop towards the integration of 'insurance + data + epidemic prevention services', and there is room for improvement in both product complexity and penetration rate.
