Canned Herring Roe refers to a processed seafood product made primarily from herring roe. The roe is cleaned, graded, salted, seasoned, or mixed with oil, sauces, or other ingredients, then packed in metal cans, glass jars, or other sealed retail containers and preserved through sealing, refrigeration, pasteurization, or other preservation methods. It is commonly consumed as a caviar substitute, appetizer, spread, cold dish ingredient, or ready-to-eat seafood product, featuring a savory taste, granular texture, and relatively high protein content.

The upstream of Canned Herring Roe primarily includes herring fishing, roe sorting, and suppliers providing cleaned raw materials; the midstream comprises processing companies that grade, salt, season, can, and pasteurize the herring roe; the downstream includes retailers, wholesalers, foodservice channels, and export markets, ultimately reaching consumers or being used in prepared foods. Upstream supply affects raw material quality, midstream processing determines flavor and shelf life, and downstream channels dictate market penetration and sales volume.
