Abstracts

According to our (Global Info Research) latest study, the global Cat Health Supplements market size was valued at US$ 1139 million in 2025 and is forecast to a readjusted size of US$ 1879 million by 2032 with a CAGR of 7.3% during review period.

Cat health supplements are non-pharmaceutical functional products specifically designed for cats to supplement their daily nutrition, support specific physiological functions, or help improve their health. Their core goal is not to treat diseases, but rather to meet the health needs of cats at different life stages or in specific conditions through scientifically formulated active ingredients. Common dosage forms include soft chewable tablets, powders, liquid drops, gels, and functional treats. Their main functions cover urinary tract health maintenance, skin and coat shine, digestive regulation, immune system enhancement, eye care, and stress reduction, and they have become an important part of modern scientific cat care.

The rapid growth of the cat health supplement market is primarily driven by a confluence of factors: the deepening trend of pet humanization, the widespread adoption of science-based pet care philosophies, heightened awareness regarding health issues specific to cats, and the demographic shift toward younger cat owners with a high propensity for spending. Furthermore, with the rise of the 'solo economy,' cat owners are increasingly inclined to utilize functional nutritional supplements to proactively prevent disease and enhance their cats' overall quality of life. Concurrently, professional veterinary recommendations, social media endorsements, ingredient transparency, and the emergence of Direct-to-Consumer (DTC) brands have further bolstered consumer trust and driven purchase conversions, thereby elevating cat health supplements from niche ancillary products to essential staples in daily cat care routines.
