Child psychological counseling services are a professional branch of psychology, referring to professional psychological assistance provided by systematically trained psychological counselors or therapists to minors aged 0-18 and their families, based on the psychological development patterns of children and adolescents and utilizing specific techniques such as play therapy, art therapy, and cognitive behavioral therapy. Its core work revolves around assessment, prevention, intervention, and development, aiming to help children cope with emotional distress, behavioral problems, developmental disorders, learning difficulties, and traumatic events. The services not only work directly with children but also necessarily include educating parents, guiding families, and collaborating with schools, promoting children's mental health, social adaptation, and potential development by building a supportive environment.

The social demand for child psychological counseling services is increasingly urgent, and the industry has a very broad prospect. The core driving forces are: the rapid increase in public awareness of mental health; parents' emphasis on children's non-academic abilities and psychological well-being under educational policies; and strong promotion by national policies. The market is rapidly penetrating from first-tier cities to second- and third-tier cities, and service formats are expanding from offline clinics to multiple channels such as school cooperation, community outreach, and online counseling platforms. Future development trends will place a strong emphasis on early prevention and screening, evidence-based practices, technological integration, and multi-system collaboration. The industry will also continue to raise its requirements for the professional qualifications and standardization of practitioners.
