Collectible Grading refers to professional authentication, evaluation, certification, and preservation services provided by specialized grading companies for collectible items with cultural, trading, and investment value. These services assess the authenticity, physical condition, completeness, rarity, manufacturing quality, and market value of collectibles through standardized grading systems, assigning official grades and certification numbers based on professional evaluation. Collectible Grading is widely applied across various categories, including trading cards, coins, banknotes, comic books, video games, toys and figures, autographs, and pop culture collectibles. By providing independent third-party verification and protective encapsulation, collectible grading reduces information asymmetry between buyers and sellers, improves market transparency and liquidity, and enhances the credibility and value recognition of collectible assets. As collectible markets become increasingly professionalized and investment-oriented, grading services are becoming an essential infrastructure connecting collectors, auction houses, marketplaces, and alternative asset investors.
