Abstracts

The global Confectionery market size is expected to reach $ 26501 million by 2032, rising at a market growth of 3.9% CAGR during the forecast period (2026-2032). Candy is a type of sweet food made primarily from sugars (sucrose, glucose, fructose, etc.), supplemented with dairy products, nuts, pectin, cocoa, flavorings, etc., through processes such as cooking, cooling, whipping, or solidification. It includes many categories such as hard candy, soft candy, chocolate, toffee, marshmallows, filled candies, and functional candies. The core value of candy lies in providing a sweet taste experience, energy replenishment, and leisure consumption, while also finding wide application in festivals, gifts, and functional foods. The average price of this product is approximately US$8,000 per ton, with global sales of approximately 2.47 million tons. The upstream of the confectionery industry relies on raw materials such as sucrose, glucose syrup, dairy products, cocoa, pectin, and flavorings. Price fluctuations (especially of sugar and cocoa) directly affect costs. Midstream companies have developed diversified product lines including hard candy, soft candy, and chocolate. Downstream companies reach consumers through supermarkets, e-commerce, convenience stores, and holiday gift channels, meeting diverse needs such as children's snacks, festive candies, gift candies, and functional sugars. Future market development trends will focus on health (low-sugar, sugar-free, functional sugars), premiumization (handmade chocolates, imported candies), and scenario-based offerings (festival customization, gift packaging), driving the industry chain towards greater refinement and differentiation.
