Abstracts

The global Corporate Crowdfunding market size is expected to reach $ 23425 million by 2032, rising at a market growth of 10.9% CAGR during the forecast period (2026-2032).

Corporate crowdfunding refers to a digital financing method where companies use crowdfunding platforms or self-built crowdfunding systems to raise funds from the public, customers, supply chain partners, or specific investor groups for new product development, market validation, supply chain expansion, project financing, or brand co-creation. Unlike traditional crowdfunding, corporate crowdfunding is typically initiated by existing brands or mature companies, with clearer business objectives, a more robust supply chain foundation, and stronger fulfillment capabilities. Corporate crowdfunding platforms usually provide modules such as project showcases, product pre-sales, investor management, compliance review, data analysis, and user co-creation tools, enabling companies to complete new product trials, cash flow recovery, and user community building under low-risk conditions.

Corporate crowdfunding is evolving from a 'supplementary financing channel' to an 'important component of corporate new product lifecycle management.' Against the backdrop of supply chain flexibility, fragmented consumer demand, and rising marketing costs, corporate crowdfunding has become a key tool for brands to test new products, validate demand, and reduce inventory risk. It not only provides funding but also provides genuine user feedback, early market signals, and a community foundation. In the future, AI will further drive the intelligentization of enterprise crowdfunding, automating everything from content generation and user profiling analysis to demand forecasting and risk assessment; blockchain will enhance financial transparency and the credibility of fulfillment. Enterprise crowdfunding will deeply integrate with DTC models, industrial cluster manufacturing, and community operations, becoming part of the enterprise's innovation system, rather than just a one-time financing activity.
