The global Credit Card Operated Laundry Machine market size is expected to reach $ million by 2030, rising at a market growth of % CAGR during the forecast period (2024-2030).

A credit card operated laundry machine is a type of laundry machine that accepts credit card payments as a method of payment for using its services. Instead of using coins or tokens, users can simply swipe or insert their credit card into the machine to pay for their laundry needs. Credit card operated laundry machines have become popular in laundromats, apartment complexes, and other shared laundry facilities. They offer convenience for users who may not have coins readily available or prefer the ease of using their credit card for payment. These machines typically have a payment terminal integrated into the control panel. Users can select the desired washing or drying cycle, and the machine will deduct the corresponding amount from their credit card. Some credit card operated laundry machines also offer additional features, such as the ability to track usage, set timers, and receive notifications on the status of the laundry cycle.
