DFIR services are technical investigation, evidence processing, and incident handling services provided by professional cybersecurity investigation and response teams to organizations that have experienced or are suspected of experiencing cyberattacks. At its core, it combines digital forensics methods with incident response processes to identify, collect, preserve, analyze, and correlate digital traces from endpoints, servers, network devices, cloud platforms, SaaS systems, identity directories, emails, mobile devices, and industrial control environments. This reconstructs attack timelines and attack paths, determines the root cause of the incident, attacker behavior, affected assets and data scope, and supports clients in implementing containment, eradication, recovery, and subsequent security improvements. The main service models include incident response retention services, emergency on-site or remote response, ransomware and data breach investigations, host and network forensics, cloud and identity forensics, malware analysis, compromise assessment, threat hunting, chain of custody management, regulatory reporting support, post-incident debriefing and remediation verification. These services are primarily used by organizations in finance, government, energy, telecommunications, healthcare, manufacturing, technology, retail, professional services, and other sectors highly reliant on digital systems.
