Abstracts

The global Financial Management Insurance market size is expected to reach $ 17845 million by 2032, rising at a market growth of 10.0% CAGR during the forecast period (2026-2032).

Wealth management insurance is an insurance product that combines insurance protection functions with capital appreciation functions. After the policyholder pays the premium, the policy not only provides basic risk protection such as death and serious illness, but also invests part of the premium into fixed income, equity and other financial markets through the professional asset management operation of the insurance company, thereby bringing sustained investment returns such as survival benefits, maturity payments, dividends or universal account settlement income to the policyholder. Its core features lie in having a determined policy cash value and relatively stable income expectations. Common types include annuity insurance, extended life insurance, dual life insurance, dividend insurance, universal insurance, and investment linked insurance, mainly meeting consumers' financial planning needs in areas such as children's education, pension reserves, wealth inheritance, and long-term stable financial management.

The financial insurance industry chain covers the upstream asset end (including investment targets such as treasury bond, high-grade credit bonds, infrastructure debt plans, long-term deposits and equity assets that meet regulatory requirements) and reinsurance institutions, the midstream product development and underwriting end (life insurance companies and pension insurance companies operating financial insurance products such as dividend insurance, universal insurance, investment linked insurance and annuity insurance), and the downstream sales and service end (including bancassurance channels, personal agency channels, third-party intermediary platforms and Internet channels). In terms of gross profit margin, there are significant differences in the profitability levels of different types of wealth management insurance products, with traditional insurance having a gross profit margin of about 36%.

Wealth management insurance is not an investment tool that pursues short-term high returns, but a 'defensive' financial planning tool used to lock in long-term returns, hedge longevity risks, and achieve targeted wealth inheritance in the context of long-term low interest rates and aging population. Its essence is to sacrifice some liquidity and short-term income elasticity in exchange for the certainty agreed upon in insurance contracts - that is, regardless of market fluctuations, the cash value of policies, survival funds, or universal account settlement rates (usually with a minimum interest rate) can provide long-term and stable cash flow. Therefore, the allocation of wealth management insurance should not simply compare returns with high-risk assets such as stocks and funds, but should focus on its role as a 'ballast stone' in household asset allocation: using current proactive planning to exchange for a certain sense of financial security in future rigid expenditure scenarios such as education and pension. For investors with low risk appetite and clear medium - to long-term financial goals (such as 10 years or more), wealth management insurance can effectively hedge the longevity risk of 'people alive, money gone' and the uncertainty brought by market fluctuations through compound interest effects and rigid redemption mechanisms.

The future development trend of wealth management insurance will present three core directions: 'return to protection, differentiation of income, and integration of services'. Against the backdrop of regulatory guidance for 'insurance surname insurance' and continuous reduction of predetermined interest rates, the attractiveness of traditional fixed income products will gradually weaken, while dividend insurance is expected to become mainstream with the mechanism of 'minimum guarantee+shared operating results', and its market share is expected to significantly increase to hedge against the risk of interest rate spread losses caused by the decline in interest rates. At the same time, product design will shift from simply 'comparing profits' to 'competing for services'. Leading insurance companies are accelerating the construction of an ecological loop of 'insurance+retirement community' and 'insurance+health management', upgrading wealth management insurance from a cold contract to a comprehensive solution covering retirement planning, medical care, and wealth inheritance. In addition, with the comprehensive implementation of the personal pension system, exclusive commercial pension insurance with tax incentives will enter a period of rapid volume growth, while high-risk floating income products such as investment linked insurance will be further subdivided into risk levels to meet the asset allocation needs of customers with different risk preferences.
