Fish farming nets are essential tools in aquaculture for containing and managing fish stocks in controlled environments. These nets are typically made from materials like nylon or polyethylene, designed to withstand underwater conditions and resist degradation from exposure to water and sunlight. They are used to partition off sections of water bodies such as ponds, lakes, or coastal areas, creating enclosures where fish can be raised, fed, and harvested efficiently. These nets help in preventing fish from escaping and protect them from predators, while also facilitating the monitoring and maintenance of fish health and growth.
