Food safety audit and certification services are a set of activities that are carried out to assess the food safety management system of a food business. The goal of these services is to ensure that the food business is meeting the applicable food safety standards and regulations.

Food safety audits are conducted by third-party auditors who are qualified and experienced in food safety. The auditors will review the food business's food safety policies, procedures, and practices to identify any potential hazards and risks. They will also assess the effectiveness of the food business's food safety management system.

If the auditor finds that the food business is meeting the applicable food safety standards, they will issue a certificate of compliance. This certificate will demonstrate to customers and other stakeholders that the food business is committed to food safety.

The food safety audit and certification services market growth is driven by a number of factors, including:

Increasing awareness of food safety among consumers: Consumers are becoming more aware of the importance of food safety and they are demanding that food businesses meet high standards of food safety.

Rising incidence of foodborne illness: Foodborne illness is a major public health problem and it is estimated that one in six people in the world gets sick from contaminated food each year. This is driving demand for food safety audit and certification services as businesses look to reduce the risk of foodborne illness.

Increasing globalization of the food industry: The food industry is becoming increasingly globalized and this is leading to increased competition between food businesses. Businesses need to meet the food safety standards of different countries in order to export their products.

Growing demand for organic and natural food products: There is a growing demand for organic and natural food products and these products are subject to stricter food safety regulations. This is driving demand for food safety audit and certification services.
