Ghrelin is a polypeptide hormone secreted by G cells in the stomach. It mainly stimulates appetite and promotes the release of growth hormone. It is often referred to as the 'ghrelin' because its levels rise significantly during states of hunger, prompting individuals to feel hungry and eat more. By binding to the ghrelin receptor in the hypothalamus, it promotes appetite, regulates energy metabolism, and stimulates the secretion of growth hormone. In addition, it is also involved in various physiological processes such as gastrointestinal motility and insulin regulation.
