Abstracts

The global Group Meal Delivery Services market size is expected to reach $ 150043 million by 2032, rising at a market growth of 6.6% CAGR during the forecast period (2026-2032).

Group meal delivery service refers to a form of collective catering service for groups, in which the food is prepared and packaged at a designated location, and then delivered to the group members or designated catering locations through a delivery service. Group meal delivery services refer to services provided by vendors to collective dining settings—such as enterprises, institutions, schools, hospitals, factories, and industrial parks—involving the centralized procurement, preparation, portioning, and timely delivery of meals. These services prioritize food safety, large-scale supply capabilities, nutritional balance, and punctual delivery.

The upstream segment of the industry encompasses grain and cooking oils, meat, poultry and eggs, seafood, vegetables, condiments, pre-prepared dishes, packaging materials, cold-chain equipment, and food testing services. The downstream segment caters to the dining needs of corporate employees, school students and faculty, hospital patients and staff, factory and industrial park personnel, government agencies, and participants in large-scale events.

In the future, group meal delivery services are expected to evolve toward greater standardization, digitalization, health-consciousness, and operational consolidation. Driven by corporate demands for cost reduction and efficiency gains, heightened food safety requirements in schools and hospitals, and the growing need for centralized meal services within urban office parks and large manufacturing facilities, service providers will increasingly prioritize the development of central kitchens, cold-chain logistics, nutritionally balanced menu design, food safety traceability systems, and smart meal-ordering platforms. Furthermore, industry competition will shift away from mere price wars to focus instead on capabilities in supply chain management, on-time fulfillment, menu consistency, regulatory compliance, and the provision of customized services.
