Health and wellness foods and drinks are products that are specifically designed to promote good health and well-being. These products typically contain nutrient-dense ingredients that provide essential vitamins, minerals, and other beneficial compounds to support overall health. Dietary supplements are products that are taken orally to provide essential nutrients that may be lacking in a person's diet. These can include vitamins, minerals, herbs, and other natural ingredients that are believed to promote health and well-being. Examples of dietary supplements include multivitamins, omega-3 supplements, and probiotics. Weight management products are designed to help people achieve and maintain a healthy weight. These products can include meal replacement shakes, appetite suppressants, and weight loss supplements. Sports nutrition products are specifically designed to support athletic performance and recovery. These products typically contain high levels of protein, amino acids, and other nutrients that are essential for building and repairing muscle, improving endurance, and promoting recovery after exercise. Examples of sports nutrition products include protein powders, energy bars, and electrolyte drinks.
