Abstracts

The global Home Aged Care Services market size is expected to reach $ 15885 million by 2032, rising at a market growth of 6.1% CAGR during the forecast period (2026-2032).

Home-aged care services refer to a range of health care and daily living support services provided to seniors at home, designed to help them enjoy their later years in the familiar environment of their homes and maintain or improve their quality of life. These services include, but are not limited to, daily living assistance, health monitoring, medication management, rehabilitation care, psychological support, and companionship and social interaction. Home-aged care services not only focus on the physical health of seniors but also include psychological care and emotional companionship, aiming to slow the aging process, improve their self-care abilities, reduce the caregiving burden on family members, and provide seniors with a dignified and independent lifestyle.

With the increasing global aging trend, the demand for home-aged care services is constantly growing. According to UN projections, the global population aged 60 and over will continue to grow, and by 2050, the elderly population is expected to reach over 20%. Against this backdrop, more and more seniors and families are choosing home-based care because it allows seniors to receive care in a familiar home environment, avoiding the unfamiliarity and maladjustment associated with entering a nursing home. Furthermore, with the development of technology, such as the widespread adoption of smart homes and telemedicine, the quality and efficiency of home-based care services are continuously improving. These factors have made the home-based care industry one of the fastest-growing industries globally. In the future, with increasing attention to aging societies and growing demand for personalized and customized care, home-based elderly care services will further develop and become an important part of the elderly care systems in many countries.
