Abstracts

According to our (Global Info Research) latest study, the global Home Pet Health Supplements market size was valued at US$ 2534 million in 2025 and is forecast to a readjusted size of US$ 4032 million by 2032 with a CAGR of 6.8% during review period.

Home pet health supplements refer to non-pharmaceutical nutritional products designed for pet-owning households, intended to maintain the daily health of dogs, cats, and other animals, prevent disease, or assist in alleviating specific physiological issues. Common product forms include soft chews, powders, liquid drops, capsules, and functional treats. Core ingredients typically encompass probiotics, Omega-3 fatty acids, glucosamine, vitamin and mineral complexes, taurine, lactoferrin, CBD (in regions where legally permitted), as well as functional formulations tailored to specific needs such as urinary health, joint care, coat luster, digestive regulation, and anxiety relief. These products prioritize safety, palatability, and scientifically balanced formulations; most reach consumers through e-commerce platforms, pet stores, veterinary channels, or direct-to-consumer (DTC) brands, while increasingly emphasizing transparent sourcing, natural and additive-free ingredients, and clinical validation.

The market for home pet health supplements is driven primarily by a confluence of factors: the integration of pets as family members, the increasing youthfulness of the pet-owning demographic, the adoption of refined feeding practices, the aging of the pet population, and a growing focus on preventive health consumption. As dogs and cats are increasingly viewed by families as long-term companions, pet owners are paying ever-closer attention to specific health concerns including gastrointestinal regulation, skin and coat health, joint care, urinary health, immune support, oral hygiene, emotional well-being, nutritional supplementation, and post-operative recovery. Consequently, products such as probiotics, fish oil, hairball remedies, joint supplements, vitamins, taurine, lactoferrin, nutritional pastes, and functional treats are gradually transitioning from discretionary purchases to staples of daily pet care. Concurrently, rising veterinary costs have incentivized pet owners to proactively mitigate potential disease risks through daily preventive care; meanwhile, e-commerce platforms, content channels, veterinary recommendations, and online pet communities have accelerated product education and driven higher rates of repurchase. Overall, home-use pet health supplements occupy a high-growth niche situated between the pet food and veterinary care sectors, with a growth trajectory shifting from mere nutritional supplementation toward comprehensive long-term health management, disease prevention, and the enhancement of overall quality of life.
