Abstracts

According to our (Global Info Research) latest study, the global Hydrodemetalization (HDM) Catalyst market size was valued at US$ 159 million in 2025 and is forecast to a readjusted size of US$ 209 million by 2032 with a CAGR of 4.0% during review period.

Hydrodemetalization (HDM) catalysts are a class of high-performance catalysts used in petroleum hydrotreating processes, primarily to remove metal impurities such as nickel and vanadium from crude oil and heavy fractions. These metal contaminants can severely poison downstream refining units like hydrocracking and catalytic cracking systems, affecting operational stability and product quality. Typically composed of molybdenum, nickel, or cobalt on alumina-based supports, HDM catalysts promote hydrogenation reactions, enabling the conversion of metal impurities into sulfide forms that are effectively deposited and removed. HDM catalysts play a critical role in heavy oil upgrading and residue hydrotreating, contributing significantly to cleaner fuel production and quality enhancement.

With the global push toward clean fuels and the increasing share of heavy oil processing, the hydrodemetalization (HDM) catalyst market is entering an unprecedented growth phase. Developing economies, especially China, India, and Middle Eastern countries, are rapidly expanding their heavy oil processing capacity, driving demand for efficient HDM catalysts. NiMo-based catalysts continue to dominate the market due to their superior metal tolerance and desulfurization performance. Meanwhile, refineries worldwide are under pressure to reduce emissions and upgrade fuel quality, accelerating the need for advanced HDM technologies.

However, the HDM catalyst industry is characterized by high technical barriers, lengthy

R&D cycles, and volatile raw material prices for alumina, molybdenum, and nickel. Increasingly strict environmental regulations on metals like nickel and cobalt in some regions further complicate formulation and waste disposal. The high market concentration also means that global pricing and innovation are largely controlled by a few multinational players, posing significant entry barriers for new challengers.

On the downstream side, with continued exploration and utilization of heavy oil resources, demand for HDM catalysts is shifting toward deep hydrotreating and residue upgrading applications. Petrochemical companies are adopting multifunctional catalysts to achieve synergies in demetallization, desulfurization, and denitrogenation. In China, the ?domestic substitution? trend is gaining momentum as local catalyst manufacturers improve their technology capabilities and expand internationally, thereby fueling regional market expansion.
