Internet fax, also known as online fax or digital fax, refers to the process of sending and receiving faxes over the internet using email or web-based platforms. It eliminates the need for physical fax machines and phone lines, allowing users to send and receive faxes using their computers, smartphones, or tablets. Internet fax services convert incoming faxes into digital files (such as PDF) that can be accessed, stored, and managed electronically, providing a more convenient and eco-friendly alternative to traditional faxing methods.

The industry trend of internet fax is towards increased adoption and reliance on digital communication methods. As organizations move towards paperless operations and remote work environments, internet fax offers a cost-effective and efficient way to manage fax communication. The trend is driven by advancements in cloud technology, improved security measures, and the demand for streamlined document management processes. Additionally, the rise of virtual fax services that integrate with email and other office applications has made internet fax more accessible and user-friendly.
