Abstracts

The global Jones Counter market size is expected to reach $ million by 2029, rising at a market growth of % CAGR during the forecast period (2023-2029).

A Jones counter is a device used to measure the distance traveled by a bicycle or motorcycle. It was invented by British engineer Arthur Jones in 1904 and is widely used in bicycle racing. The principle of the Jones counter is to convert the rotation of the wheel into a digital count through a device, so as to record the distance traveled by the vehicle in real time. The device usually consists of a pinion mounted on the wheel and a counter associated with it. When the wheel rotates, the pinion will drive the counter to count, thus recording the mileage traveled by the vehicle. The advantages of the Jones counter are high accuracy, high reliability, and no interference from the external environment and conditions. It can help cyclists to accurately grasp their driving distance, which is very helpful for training and competition. However, as technology has advanced, modern bicycle calculators have adopted more advanced electronic sensors and calculation methods, gradually replacing the use of Jones counters.

This report studies the global Jones Counter production, demand, key manufacturers, and key regions.
