Abstracts

The global Lifeboat Rental Service market size is expected to reach $ 1243 million by 2032, rising at a market growth of 5.6% CAGR during the forecast period (2026-2032). To address the high cost, complex maintenance, and inflexible emergency resource allocation of onboard life-saving equipment, life raft leasing services have emerged. Since the late 20th century, with the development of maritime safety regulations and specialized service models, life raft leasing services have gradually evolved into various models, including temporary leasing, long-term management, rapid deployment, and supporting maintenance. These services are widely used in merchant shipping, offshore platforms, waterfront engineering construction, and large-scale water activities. Currently, this service has become a critical safety support link in modern shipping and offshore operations, effectively improving emergency response capabilities, optimizing asset allocation, and ensuring personnel and operational safety.

Life raft leasing services are developing towards intelligence, green technology, and high precision. Through technological innovation and industrial chain collaboration, they balance safety standards and cost control, addressing the diversified rescue needs brought about by the expansion of the marine economy, while also breaking through the technological barriers of international brands and enhancing the global competitiveness of local enterprises.
