Litigation funding, also known as litigation finance, can mean many things. In general, it describes the provision of capital by a third-party “litigation funder” to a plaintiff in a litigation. In return, the litigation funder receives a portion of what the plaintiff recovers. The capital provided by monetizing a legal claim may directly pay for some of the costs of litigation, including attorneys’ fees, expert witness fees and court expenses. Litigation finance may be used to fund working capital for companies involved in litigation or even help business owners pay for personal expenses. A third party professional funder can pay some or all of the costs/expenses associated with a dispute in return for a share of the proceeds of the dispute if it is successful. If the litigation is not successful, the funder bears the costs it has agreed to fund.

The litigation funding and expenses market is a global market that involves the financing and support of legal disputes and associated expenses. Litigation funding refers to the provision of funds to plaintiffs or law firms to cover the costs of litigation, such as legal fees, expert witnesses, court costs, and other expenses. This market has gained prominence in recent years as a means to manage the high costs and risks associated with legal disputes. The global litigation funding and expenses market has experienced significant growth and evolution. The increasing complexity of legal cases, rising legal costs, and the lengthening of legal proceedings have led to a growing demand for litigation funding and expense management services. One of the main drivers of this market is the financial burden associated with legal disputes. Litigation can be expensive, especially in high-stakes cases involving complex legal issues. Litigation funding provides an alternative financing option for plaintiffs who may not have the financial resources to pursue legal action on their own. By securing funding from third-party litigation funders, plaintiffs can access the necessary capital to fund their lawsuits and potentially level the playing field against well-funded defendants. Additionally, litigation funding allows law firms to manage their finances more effectively. By outsourcing the costs of litigation to funders, law firms can allocate their resources to other areas and take on more cases without depleting their working capital. This can help smaller law firms compete with larger firms and provide access to justice for individuals and businesses who might otherwise be unable to afford legal representation. Geographically, the market for litigation funding and expenses is expanding globally. While the concept of litigation funding originated in common law countries such as the United States and the United Kingdom, it has been gaining traction in civil law jurisdictions as well. Various regions worldwide, including Europe, Asia Pacific, and Latin America, are witnessing an increase in the adoption of litigation funding and expense management services.
