Abstracts

The global Log Audit market size is expected to reach $ million by 2030, rising at a market growth of % CAGR during the forecast period (2024-2030).

Compliance and regulatory requirements: As cybersecurity and privacy regulations continue to tighten, enterprises need to meet compliance requirements and audit logs to comply with relevant regulations. This provides an important impetus for the development of log audit technology.

Data protection requirements: In order to ensure the integrity and security of data, enterprises need to strengthen log auditing to promptly discover and respond to potential security threats. This has prompted the continuous development of log auditing technology to meet higher-level security needs.

Logs are information recorded by computer systems, equipment, software, etc. under certain circumstances.Log auditing refers to comprehensively collecting logs generated by common security equipment, network equipment, databases, servers, application systems, hosts and other equipment in enterprise software systems and storing, auditing and analyzing them to identify and discover potential security events and security risks.Log auditing is also an important part of the data security field.
