Abstracts

The maritime naval force of a country's defense sector commands and controls waterborne vessels that are deployed for surface water or underwater warfare. Such vessels are used to secure the ocean waters surrounding a country's land from external interference. Ocean waters provide access to aquatic food and marine trade routes. They also hold access to resources like sea floor earth materials and underwater oil wells. Naval vessels are used to protect these resources from exploitation by foreign bodies as well as the facilities dedicated to exploring these resources. A country's naval force also provides security and escort services to the commercial ships that tread through the tidal trade routes in proximity to the country's coasts.
