Abstracts

According to our (Global Info Research) latest study, the global Neck Breaker market size was valued at US$ million in 2025 and is forecast to a readjusted size of US$ million by 2032 with a CAGR of %during review period.

A neck breaker, in the context of poultry processing, is a mechanical device used to humanely euthanize chickens or other poultry by breaking their necks. The neck breaker is designed to quickly and forcefully apply pressure to the neck of the bird, causing a rapid and painless death by cervical dislocation. This method is considered more humane than others, such as stunning the birds with an electric current, because it results in immediate loss of consciousness and death. The device usually consists of a mechanism that securely holds the bird's head while a lever or other apparatus applies force to the neck, breaking it. Neck breakers are often part of an automated processing line, where birds are transported on a conveyor belt and individually processed at various stages, including stunning, killing, bleeding, plucking, and eviscerating.
