According to our (Global Info Research) latest study, the global Online Community Building Platform market size was valued at USD 86 million in 2022 and is forecast to a readjusted size of USD 112.4 million by 2029 with a CAGR of 3.8% during review period.

The market for online community building platforms has been experiencing significant growth, driven by several factors. Firstly, the increasing importance of community engagement for businesses and organizations has led to a growing demand for platforms that enable effective community building. Online communities offer a range of benefits, such as enhancing customer loyalty, driving user-generated content, and gathering valuable insights and feedback. The availability of advanced features and functionalities has also contributed to the market's growth. Online community building platforms offer features such as discussion forums, activity feeds, event management, document sharing, member directories, and social networking capabilities. These features help to facilitate communication, collaboration, and networking within the community. Furthermore, the rise of social media and the increasing popularity of online communities have fueled the demand for community building platforms. Businesses and organizations are leveraging these platforms to create branded communities, engage with customers and partners, and build a sense of belonging and loyalty among their audience. The global COVID-19 pandemic has further accelerated the adoption of online community building platforms. With remote work becoming the new norm, organizations are relying on these platforms to connect and collaborate virtually, overcoming geographical barriers and time constraints. Online communities also provide a sense of connection and support during periods of isolation and social distancing. In terms of end-users, the market caters to a wide range of industries, including healthcare, education, retail, technology, non-profit organizations, and professional services. Each industry has unique requirements for community building, and online community building platforms offer customizable solutions to meet those needs.
