Abstracts

A beer can be called 'organic' if it meets the following federal guidelines. Firstly, at least 95 percent of its ingredients are organically produced (e.g., no GMOs, synthetic fertilizers, pesticides). Secondly, the brewery must prove that the remaining ingredients were not available in sufficient quantities or qualities in organic form. And these non-organic ingredients must be on the federal Agriculture Department's list of allowed and prohibited substances. There is also a kind of super-duper organic certification, called 100 Percent Organic, that means exactly what it says: Everything that went into the product, including cleaning and processing materials, was organic. Such beers are understandably rare.

SCOPE OF THE REPORT:

This report focuses on the Organic Beer in global market, especially in North America, Europe and Asia-Pacific, South America, Middle East and Africa. This report categorizes the market based on manufacturers, regions, type and application.

U.S. organic beer sales have increased more than tenfold since 2003, from $9 million to $92 million in 2014, the latest year figures were available from the Organic Trade Association. Such is the growth in popularity in the U.S. of organic beer, which carries on despite some considerable challenges in the future.

The worldwide market for Organic Beer is expected to grow at a CAGR of roughly xx% over the next five years, will reach xx million US$ in 2023, from xx million US$ in 2017, according to a new GIR (Global Info Research) study.
