According to our (Global Info Research) latest study, the global Papermaking Pulp market size was valued at USD million in 2023 and is forecast to a readjusted size of USD million by 2030 with a CAGR of % during review period.

Papermaking pulp refers to the fibrous material used as the raw ingredient in the production of paper and paper products. It is the primary component of paper and is responsible for providing the structural integrity, durability, and other physical characteristics of the final paper product. Pulp can be derived from various sources, including wood, recycled paper, and non-wood fibers such as bamboo, sugarcane bagasse, and agricultural residues. The process of obtaining pulp involves breaking down the raw materials into fibers through mechanical or chemical means. This fiber-rich material is then processed and refined to create a pulp slurry, which is the basis for papermaking.
