According to our (Global Info Research) latest study, the global Parametric Crop Insurance market size was valued at US$ million in 2025 and is forecast to a readjusted size of US$ million by 2032 with a CAGR of %during review period.

Parametric Crop Insurance is a type of agricultural insurance that provides payouts based on predefined parameters, such as weather indices (e.g., rainfall levels, temperature) or yield indices, rather than actual crop losses. This approach offers farmers faster compensation, as there is no need for field assessments. The insurance is triggered when the selected index falls below or exceeds the agreed threshold, indicating unfavorable conditions that are likely to cause losses. It is commonly used in regions prone to climate risks, offering a more efficient and scalable solution for managing agricultural risks.
