Abstracts

The global Pet Boarding and In-home Pet Sitting Services market size is expected to reach $ 28358 million by 2032, rising at a market growth of 8.2% CAGR during the forecast period (2026-2032).

Pet boarding and in-home pet sitting services refer to short-term, recurring, or on-demand pet care services provided when pet owners are traveling, working, away from home, or temporarily unable to care for their pets. The category mainly covers commercial pet boarding, home-based boarding, pet daycare, drop-in visits, cat feeding visits, dog walking, overnight pet sitting, and live-in house sitting for pets. Service providers include dedicated pet care marketplaces, franchise networks, pet boarding chains, home-based hosts, certified pet sitters, dog walkers, and local pet care operators. The core value of the industry lies in ensuring that pets receive feeding, supervision, hygiene support, companionship, exercise, safety monitoring, and timely updates while their owners are absent. Increasingly, platforms and chain operators use identity verification, caregiver screening, booking and payment systems, reviews, service reports, photo and video updates, GPS tracking, insurance coverage, and customer support to reduce trust barriers and standardize service delivery.

Based on our research, pet boarding and in-home pet sitting should be understood as a substitute-care service system rather than a single category such as pet hotels or cat feeding visits. The industry serves pet owners who are temporarily absent due to travel, work, holidays, or unexpected events, and it covers commercial boarding, home-based boarding, dog daycare, drop-in visits, cat sitting, dog walking, overnight sitting, and live-in house sitting. North America and Europe have long-established offline supply through kennels, pet hotels, dog daycare centers, and independent sitters, while online platforms have helped aggregate fragmented caregivers and standardize booking, payment, reviews, and customer communication. In Asia, growth is more closely linked to mobile booking, certified caregivers, in-home cat feeding, dog walking, and urban pet ownership patterns. Demand is more seasonal and event-driven than pet food or veterinary care, but once trust is established, repeat usage and referrals can be strong.

From a demand perspective, North America remains the largest regional market, followed by Europe, while Asia has faster growth potential. The U.S. pet services base is supported by a large pet-owning population and a broad “other services” spending category that includes boarding, pet sitting, and walking. Europe benefits from a large base of pet-owning households, which supports home boarding, cat sitting, and house sitting. China, India, Southeast Asia, Korea, and Japan are driven by urban pet ownership, travel demand, smaller households, and the growing acceptance of app-based or platform-mediated pet care. However, the industry still faces trust and standardization challenges, especially in markets where licensing, caregiver certification, insurance coverage, liability allocation, and service quality remain uneven. The next stage of competition will be less about merely listing sitters and more about providing verifiable, traceable, insured, and accountable care.
