Abstracts

The global Pet Health Supplement market size is expected to reach $ 5131 million by 2032, rising at a market growth of 6.8% CAGR during the forecast period (2026-2032).

Pet health supplement are non-pharmaceutical functional products designed for companion animals such as dogs and cats to supplement nutrients that may be lacking in their daily diet, support specific physiological functions, maintain health, or help manage chronic problems.

The pet health supplement market has maintained rapid growth in recent years, primarily driven by the increase in the global pet population, the trend of pets becoming family members, and the upgrading of pet health consumption. More and more pet owners are focusing on extending their pets' lifespan, improving immunity, joint health, gastrointestinal health, and skin and coat care, leading to a continuous increase in demand for functional nutritional supplements. The growing number of aging pets has also spurred the rapid development of products related to joint, heart, gut, and cognitive health. Simultaneously, consumers are increasingly accepting of natural ingredients, hypoallergenic formulas, probiotics, herbal nutrients, and functional additives, further driving market expansion as trends towards premium and refined pet care emerge. Promotion through e-commerce platforms, social media, and veterinary clinics has enhanced consumers' awareness of pet nutrition management, while veterinary recommendations and the popularization of scientific feeding concepts have increased the penetration rate of pet health supplements in daily pet care. As pet health management concepts gradually shift towards preventative care, the pet health supplement market is continuously upgrading towards functionality, specialization, and premiumization.
