A piston mortar sprayer is a mechanical device used in construction and industrial applications to pump and spray mortar, a mixture of cement, sand, and water (or other aggregates), with high pressure and precision. It operates via a piston-driven mechanism that pushes the mortar through a hose and nozzle, allowing for efficient and even application on surfaces such as walls, floors, tunnels, or structures. This equipment is widely used for tasks like wall plastering, floor leveling, grouting in infrastructure projects (e.g., tunnels, bridges, dams), and industrial slurry transportation (e.g., in power plants or metallurgical facilities). Key advantages include increased productivity compared to manual methods, consistent material distribution, and the ability to handle various mortar types, making it essential for large-scale construction, repair, and reinforcement work.
