Abstracts

The global Pre-employment Physical Examination Service market size is expected to reach $ million by 2030, rising at a market growth of % CAGR during the forecast period (2024-2030).

Through pre-employment physicals, employers can better understand a candidate's physical condition and thus better assess their suitability for the position. Employers can also know in advance if job applicants have health problems so that they can provide appropriate arrangements or suggestions. In addition, for certain industries, such as food processing, medical care, etc., pre-employment medical examinations are required to ensure safety and hygiene in the workplace.

Pre-employment physical examination service is a physical examination service performed during the job search process. The purpose is to ensure that job seekers are healthy and qualified for the job they are applying for. This kind of service is usually provided by professional medical institutions. The main examination items include but are not limited to internal medicine, surgery, ENT department, electrocardiogram, B-ultrasound, chest X-ray, blood routine, urine routine, etc.
