Abstracts

The global Private Company Valuation market size is expected to reach $ 1782 million by 2032, rising at a market growth of 5.7% CAGR during the forecast period (2026-2032).

To address the problems of opaque operating information, lack of publicly traded market pricing, and resulting difficulties in investment and financing decisions and disagreements in value judgments in private enterprises, a private company valuation system has emerged. Since the mid-20th century, with the rapid development of venture capital and modern financial theory, private company valuation has evolved from empirical judgment into a systematic professional discipline. Currently, private company valuation has developed into a professional financial tool encompassing various methodologies such as income approach, market approach, and asset-based approach. It is widely applied in areas such as startup financing, mergers and acquisitions, equity incentives, financial reporting, and tax planning, providing crucial quantitative basis for transaction pricing, management decisions, and value management.

Private company valuation is a dynamic balancing act, requiring a comprehensive consideration of financial, industry, and policy factors. Driven by both policy support and technological innovation, the valuation of Chinese private enterprises is expected to undergo structural improvement, but market volatility and valuation bubbles must be guarded against. Companies should focus on enhancing their core competitiveness, and investors should rationally utilize valuation tools to jointly promote the high-quality development of the private economy.
