Abstracts

The global Real Estate Management Services market size is expected to reach $ 36932 million by 2032, rising at a market growth of 4.9% CAGR during the forecast period (2026-2032).

Real estate management services refer to the comprehensive management activities undertaken by professional property service companies or organizations on behalf of owners, providing full life-cycle operation, maintenance, security, cleaning, customer service, and asset value-added services for various types of real estate.

The development of real estate management services is driven by multiple factors, including the deepening of urbanization and the expansion of the existing housing stock, the increasing demands of homeowners for quality living and working spaces, the government's promotion of modern grassroots governance and smart community construction, and the transformation of property management companies. As the growth rate of new residential construction slows, developers and investors are paying more attention to the full life-cycle value of assets, prompting property services to shift from basic maintenance to value-added services and refined operations. At the same time, the maturity of technologies such as the Internet of Things, AI, and big data has made smart security, energy management, and contactless services standard features, improving management efficiency and reducing reliance on manpower. In addition, policies encouraging property management companies to participate in community governance, coupled with the capital market's favor for high-quality property management companies, are jointly driving the industry to accelerate its upgrade from labor-intensive to technology-driven, branded, and platform-based.

This report studies the global Real Estate Management Services demand, key
