Abstracts

Reconciliation is an accounting method that uses process information and mathematical methods in order to endorse that numbers are accurate and in arrangement. It checks whether the amount leaving an account coordinates with the amount that has been consumed, confirming the two are balanced at the completion of the recording interval. Reconciliation software is equipped with various features that help in reducing risks, improving quality, and save time through automated operations. In addition, reconciliation software provides the ability to streamline reconciliation, eliminate paper checks, and enhance vendor payments. However, outmoded systems take time and require dedicated staff to manually review and match records with bank statements on a monthly or bi-monthly basis.
