Abstracts

The global Retail Category Management Software market size is expected to reach $ 130 million by 2032, rising at a market growth of 5.3% CAGR during the forecast period (2026-2032).

Retail Category Management Software is a data analytics-based professional system used to scientifically plan and optimize retailers' merchandise categorization, display, pricing, and inventory. By integrating sales, customer, and market data, it transforms experience-based merchandising decisions into data-driven, refined management. The software fundamentally solves two major business challenges: the disconnect between product mix and customer demand, and inefficient use of shelf space and inventory resources. It accurately matches products with customer preferences and optimizes shelf space efficiency and inventory turnover. Its direct business value lies in increasing same-store sales and gross margin, reducing inventory costs, and enhancing customer shopping experience and loyalty, making it a key tool for retailers to build core competitiveness in the omnichannel era.

The global development of retail category management software exhibits a distinct pattern of 'North America dominance, Europe progressing in parallel, and Asia Pacific accelerating.' North America and Western Europe are the dual cores of technology and market, dominated by established retail software giants and emerging cloud service providers. These markets are mature, with demand focused on in-depth analytics and omnichannel optimization. The Asia Pacific region is the fastest-growing market, primarily driven by local SaaS service providers. Benefiting from a vast e-commerce ecosystem, demand emphasizes online-offline integration, rapid deployment, and adaptation to local retail models. The development of other emerging markets heavily relies on the degree of retail chain establishment and digital infrastructure, with services primarily focused on basic functionalities. Overall, mature markets focus on AI-driven, sophisticated, and scientific decision-making, while growth markets emphasize basic empowerment for efficiency improvements and online business transformation. This report studies the global Retail Category Management Software demand, key companies, and key regions.
