A sauce is a creamy liquid that is served with food or used to prepare foods. Sauces add flavor and moisture to food and enhance the palatability of food. Few of the major sauces that are consumed in the US are ketchup, soy sauce, mustard sauce, tabasco, and sriracha. Dressings are used for garnishing and adding taste to food, especially salads, burgers, sandwiches, and other snack items. Some of the widely used dressings are mayonnaise, vinaigrettes, Italian dressings, and Russian dressings. Dips are creamy, paste-like dressings that are generally consumed with breads, nachos, french fries, vegetables, and salad.

Consumers in the US are increasingly consuming ethnic and flavored table and cooking sauces influenced by the changing culinary trends and large multicultural groups in this region that demand for flavored hot sauces. Consumers adopt table and cooking sauces as they provide instant taste and convenience to the users, contributing to the growth of the table and cooking sauces segment in the condiments, dressing, and sauces industry.
