Abstracts

The global Senior Care Service market size is expected to reach $ 2010 million by 2032, rising at a market growth of 6.0% CAGR during the forecast period (2026-2032).

Senior care services refer to continuous care, daily living support, health management, and long-term care services provided to older adults. These services typically encompass assistance with daily living, personal care, rehabilitation support, medical care bridging, psychological support, and community care, aiming to help older adults maintain a safe, healthy, and as independent a lifestyle as possible. These services can be provided in homes, community day care centers, assisted living facilities, nursing homes, and other similar settings, and are essentially an important component of the senior care and long-term care service system.

In recent years, the market has continued to expand, driven primarily by the deepening aging population, the increasing number of elderly and disabled individuals, and the relative weakening of family care capabilities. Simultaneously, more and more countries are promoting 'aging in place,' making the continuous service system between home care, community care, and institutional care more important. Market demand is also gradually shifting from simple daily living care to a balanced approach encompassing medical care, rehabilitation, chronic disease management, and comprehensive support.

From an industry development perspective, the current market exhibits three distinct trends: First, the proportion of home-based and community-based services is increasing, with more services designed to delay institutional admission and reduce reliance on hospitalization and nursing homes; second, the level of service specialization is increasing, with growing demand for specific areas such as nursing care, rehabilitation, dementia care, and health monitoring; and third, labor shortages have become a pain point for the industry, with insufficient labor in long-term care and health care driving service providers to accelerate digitalization, process optimization, and the application of assistive technologies.
