Abstracts

Solid cotton is made of polyolefin as the main raw material, mixed with foaming agents and other additives and other raw materials for forming, and irradiated by high-energy electron beams generated by industrial electron accelerators to produce cross-linking, thereby changing the molecular structure of polyethylene. The compact three-dimensional network structure, through a series of processing procedures such as foaming and shaping, produces a high-grade closed-cell foam material with high environmental protection, high performance, high quality, fine appearance, comfortable feel and good secondary processing performance. .
