Abstracts

The global Topical Minoxidil market size is expected to reach $ million by 2030, rising at a market growth of % CAGR during the forecast period (2024-2030).

Topical Minoxidil is a medication that comes in the form of a liquid or foam solution and is applied directly to the scalp to treat hair loss. It was originally developed as an oral medication for high blood pressure but was later discovered to have the side effect of stimulating hair growth. Minoxidil works by dilating blood vessels, which improves blood flow to the hair follicles, promoting their activity and potentially prolonging the growth phase (anagen) of the hair cycle. It also appears to affect potassium channels in the hair follicles, leading to enhanced cell proliferation and differentiation. It is primarily used for treating androgenetic alopecia, commonly known as male pattern baldness and female pattern hair loss. For men, it can help slow down hair loss and stimulate new hair growth on the crown and vertex of the scalp. In women, it's effective in maintaining existing hair and sometimes promoting regrowth on the top of the scalp. The typical concentration of topical minoxidil available over-the-counter is 2% for women and 5% for men, although higher concentrations may be available with a prescription. Continuous use is required to maintain results; once the application stops, any hair gained during treatment may be lost again within a few months due to the resumption of the normal hair growth cycle.

This report studies the global Topical Minoxidil production, demand, key manufacturers, and key regions.
