Vanilla bean paste is a concentrated mixture made from vanilla beans, sugar, and sometimes additional flavorings. It is a popular alternative to vanilla extract, offering a more intense vanilla flavor and the added benefit of vanilla bean specks for visual appeal. Vanilla bean paste is commonly used in baking, pastry, and dessert recipes, as well as in beverages and savory dishes.

The upstream industry chain of vanilla bean paste includes the cultivation and harvesting of vanilla beans, which are primarily grown in tropical regions such as Madagascar, Indonesia, and Tahiti. The beans are then cured, dried, and shipped to manufacturers who process them into paste or other forms.

The downstream industry chain of vanilla bean paste includes the food and beverage industry, particularly the baking and pastry segments. It is also used in the production of ice cream, confectionery, and other desserts. Vanilla bean paste is also used in the cosmetics and fragrance industries.

In terms of distribution of the product's world market share by region, Madagascar is the largest producer of vanilla beans, followed by Indonesia and Tahiti. The United States is the largest consumer of vanilla bean paste, followed by Europe and Asia.
