The global Vendor Managed Inventory System market size is expected to reach $ 758 million by 2032, rising at a market growth of 4.7% CAGR during the forecast period (2026-2032).

Vendor Managed Inventory (VMI) System is a supply chain collaborative software solution where the supplier (vendor) takes full responsibility for monitoring, forecasting, and replenishing inventory at the customer's location. By sharing real-time inventory, sales and consumption data between trading partners, the system automates replenishment decisions based on pre-agreed stock thresholds, demand forecasts and service level agreements, shifting inventory planning workload from the buyer to the supplier and reducing overall stockout risk, overstock costs and bullwhip effect across the supply chainTechTarget.

The VMI system market has witnessed significant growth in recent years due to several factors. One of the key drivers is the increasing need for efficient supply chain management practices. VMI helps to streamline inventory management, reduce stockouts, improve forecasting accuracy, and enhance overall operational efficiency. By enabling suppliers to take a more active role in managing inventory, VMI can lead to cost savings, improved customer satisfaction, and better demand-supply alignment. Another factor contributing to the growth of the VMI system market is the advancement in technology and the availability of sophisticated software solutions. VMI systems leverage technologies such as cloud computing, data analytics, and real-time monitoring to facilitate accurate demand forecasting, inventory tracking, and automated replenishment processes. These technologies enable seamless collaboration between suppliers and customers, leading to improved inventory visibility and streamlined operations. The market for VMI systems can be segmented based on industry verticals, including retail, manufacturing, healthcare, automotive, and others. Each industry has its unique inventory management requirements, and VMI systems can be tailored to address specific industry needs.
