A vet house call refers to a veterinarian visiting a pet owner's home to provide medical care or services for their pet, rather than the pet owner taking their pet to a veterinary clinic or hospital. During a vet house call, a veterinarian will perform a physical exam, offer preventive care, administer necessary treatments, and/or administer vaccines at the pet owner's home. Vet house calls can offer a more convenient option for pet owners who have difficulty transporting their pets to a clinic, or for pets who experience anxiety in a clinic setting. It can also be beneficial for pets that are too sick or injured to be transported, or for pet owners who prefer personalized care in the comfort of their own home. Some veterinary clinics and practices offer vet house call services as part of their offerings.
