According to our (Global Info Research) latest study, the global Halal Food Certification Service market size was valued at US$ 540 million in 2025 and is forecast to a readjusted size of US$ 925 million by 2032 with a CAGR of 8.0% during review period.

Halal food certification is an official verification—issued by an approved certifying body—that a food product and its production process comply with Islamic dietary rules (halal). It typically checks ingredients and sourcing (no prohibited substances like pork derivatives and, depending on standards, restrictions on alcohol), processing aids and additives, segregation to prevent cross-contamination with non-halal materials, sanitation and traceability, and, for meat and poultry, that slaughtering is performed according to the required religious method and animal welfare rules. Certified products can carry a halal logo/mark, helping Muslim consumers and regulators trust that the food meets halal requirements and enabling manufacturers to access halal-regulated or halal-preferred markets. Many certification bodies and guidance pages list annual fees ranging from roughly $250 to $7,000, depending on the scope of certification.

Upstream, Halal-certified services depend on Islamic regulatory authorities, Shariah scholars, certification bodies, and laboratory testing providers who establish Halal standards, interpret Islamic law, verify ingredients, audit facilities, and provide technical assessments. Inputs include raw-material documentation, supply-chain traceability systems, cleanliness protocols, and product-safety testing. Downstream, certified products and services enter markets through food manufacturers, slaughterhouses, cosmetics and pharmaceutical producers, logistics providers, restaurants, and retailers that display Halal logos to reach Muslim consumers and comply with import/export requirements. Halal certification then enables broader commercial outcomes such as access to Halal food markets, cross-border trade, participation in government procurement, and consumer trust, while ongoing renewal audits, training, and compliance monitoring form the recurring downstream service cycle.
